INTRODUCTION.

I.

I HOPE that I may be forgiven for devoting a few pages to the past history of the Library, the catalogue of which I now place before my friends.

John Lindsay, Lord Menmuir of Balcarres, 2nd son of David 9th Earl of Crawford, was born in 1552 and received his education in Scotland, England and France, and became one of the most distinguished men of his day in Scotland, in Letters, Law and Politics. He was one of the Octavians who, with the Privy Council, governed the land during the minority of James VI., and later was Lord Privy Seal and Secretary of State.

To him, the first of the Balcarres line, and to his influence, we owe the inception of the Library. His special interest lay in his own correspondence with many distinguished personages of Europe and in historical papers and autographs.

No doubt printed books must have been there also, but few that can be identified are now upon our shelves.

His son, Sir David Lindsay of Balcarres, followed Lord Menmuir's footsteps in the paths of learning, but preferring the society of his books to that of camps and courts, abjured a life of ambition for the quest of wisdom in retreat.

The Library grew rapidly under his care, not only in size but in reputation.

His brother Robert, who died without issue, was also a collector and his books were added to those at Balcarres.

Among the old letters preserved in the archives at Haigh is one from Sir John Scott of Scottstarvet asking for the loan of various works of the early Scottish poets which were preserved in manuscript, and which he was anxious to print in his work "Delitiæ Poetarum Scotorum". Again Drummond of Hawthornden, after staying with Lord Balcarres on a short visit writes (26 July, 1623) thanking him for the sight of the Library and sending a copy of his work "The Flowers of Zion," the special interest of which is recorded in the proper place in the following pages.

Most of David, Lord Balcarres' books, are in old bright calf bindings with an armorial shield and inscription for the larger size, and his crest, a Pavilion azure semée of stars on his smaller volumes. A short time ago I was able by a fortunate chance to buy the original brass die which had been cut for stamping these old volumes, and after his death had probably been laid aside, lost, and passing through all the indignities of the shop of the scrap-iron dealer, nearly 300 years later came home to greet the remnants of its former workmanship.

The next to possess the Library was Alexander, Lord Balcarres, whose life was passed in fighting for his King, or in exile with Charles II. under whom he held the post of Secretary of State for Scotland. Although his delight was in his books, as we know from the correspondence with his cousin, Lord Maitland (afterwards the celebrated Duke of Lauderdale) on matters concerning their books and libraries, yet I doubt his having added anything to the collection, as his fortunes were reduced to the lowest ebb owing to the sequestration of the property by Cromwell.

On the occasion of the coronation of Charles II. at Scone Palace in 1651, the King raised his dignity to that of Earl of Balcarres.

Worn out by exposure on the Scottish hills, followed by privations in a strange land, Earl Alexander died at the early age of forty-one.

Charles the second Earl, died young, and was succeeded by his brother Colin, also a statesman and a soldier during the reigns of Charles II. and James II. He had received a fair education under the care of his mother, Anne of Seaforth. We have a letter of hers addressed to Earl Colin on his entering life, in which allusion is made to the use he might make of the Library as containing stores for the mind whether in the way of improvement or recreation.

Some little while afterwards, Colin incurred the displeasure of King Charles by a marriage contrary to the royal wishes, and he was sent to his estates. The next six years he spent in the Library, to his joy. Later came the Revolution of 1688 when he went into exile, and was again a wanderer. Being permitted to visit Scotland he foresaw the coming troubles, and in 1712 made over to the Advocates' Library the whole of the invaluable collection of historical manuscripts formed by John Lindsay and continued by his successors, thus ensuring their safety even though his family should perish in the rising in the Highlands. The year 1715 having passed and domestic peace being again restored, Earl Colin received a pardon through the good offices of Churchill, Duke of Marlborough, an old and faithful friend. He then returned to the shelter of the Library he loved so well until his death in 1722.

Alexander, the fourth Earl, was a soldier, and did little with the Library except to leave in it several MS volumes of notes, mostly on military subjects.

Earl James, the younger brother of the fourth Earl, served in the navy until 1715, then passed into the army, terminating his active career after the battles of Dettingen and Fontenoy. At the age of sixty he took unto himself a wife, and a numerous family ensued, the eldest of whom was Lady Anne Lindsay (subsequently Barnard) whose name will be remembered as the writer of the ballad, "Auld Robin Gray"; the youngest of the children died at a great age as Elizabeth, Countess of Hardwick. As a child I was taken to see her, my great-grand-aunt, whose grandfather was given away in marriage by Charles II.!

Earl James, without being a collector, loved books, and he spoke of them as next to the society of his young children and his writings on the history of his family: they were his constant resource and comfort.

He died in 1768, and his widow lived in retirement at Balcarres during the minority of her son Earl Alexander, who entered the army at the age of sixteen and led a life of constant military duty in the American War of Independence, and subsequently as Governor of Jersey and Jamaica during the time of the French Revolution. During his frequent absences from the kingdom, his wife left Balcarres and resided in Edinburgh for the education of her children.

I now come to a period of sorrow and desolation for the Library—after the eleven children of Earl James had taken to their wings, going into the army, navy, the service of the H. E. I. Co., etc., etc., the old house was left without one imbued with the love of the books or with the conception of the priceless treasure that had been laid up by ancestors during a period of more than two centuries. Dust pervaded all, and Lady Balcarres, my great-grandmother, while living in Edinburgh, permitted the greater part of the Library to be torn up, thrown away, used by grocers for wrapping up bacon—almost all the books were destroyed, the few that survived were dealt with as I shall tell further on.

When Earl Alexander left the service he entered into negotiations with his second brother, Robert Lindsay of Leuchars (who had passed a long life in India), which resulted in the sale to him (about 1788) of the old family property of Balcarres, and the proceeds were devoted to the development of the estate of Haigh, in the county of Lancaster. This had come to him by his marriage with Elizabeth Dalrymple who was the heiress through her mother of the ancient family of Bradshaigh.

To Haigh, therefore, in 1825, with Earl Alexander and his family, came the remnants of the ancient Library, to strike new root in a foreign soil.

My grandfather, on the death of John, Lord Mun-caster, his father-in-law, persuaded Earl Alexander to purchase his Library, a collection [illegible] in number of good and useful books, of all classes of literature though note of high pecuniary value.

My grandfather (b. 1781) [illegible] took great interest in [illegible] and agriculture, these are represented in the Library.

The early years of the nineteenth century saw us in possession of a good general [illegible] of a useful character.

The spirit of Sir David [illegible] restlessly wandering [illegible] his books, when he [illegible] a mind congenial to his own and [illegible] guided the boy. [illegible] earliest youth was passed [illegible] for the absorption of knowledge. [illegible] restoration of the old Library [illegible] his mind. May I be allowed to quote [illegible] from a letter addressed to [illegible]

"I had, in fact, in my early youth, often [illegible] of all countries, ages and [illegible] the symbolical Pavilion of [illegible] friends might thus [illegible] of Athens, with [illegible] branches of literature, art or science [illegible] taste should severally direct [illegible] proposed to myself as a [illegible] Library into one worthy of [illegible] bibliomaniacal [illegible] a library of intrinsic [illegible] useful and interesting books, old and new, in all walks of literature, although [illegible] treasures, which lend grace and value to such collections."

It was with such resolutions that my father first began collecting in 1826, shortly after he went to Eton, and his spare time was devoted to reading all works on bibliography that he could obtain, together [illegible] manner of subjects, and thus formed [illegible] used as a guide for future purchases.

From Eton he went to Trinity College, Cambridge, and whenever possible travelled through France and Italy, gathering up a long series of local and provincial histories which it would be difficult to replace at the present time. All this was effected on his school and college allowances, and consequently he had often to forego the acquisition of books essential to his scheme.

But it must not be supposed that he was satisfied with mere possession of the books: what he bought, he read and absorbed, thus, blessed with a wonderful memory, acquiring an encyclopædic knowledge, constantly increasing and never forgotten.

II.

I must for a moment revert to the past history of my family. As in many other cases during the Civil Wars, families were divided amongst themselves and took opposing interests.

The chief of our House had supported the Royal or losing side, and a younger branch, the Lindsays of the Byres, were confirmed to the honours as Earls of Crawford and Lindsay.

This, the interpolated line of Earls, became totally extinct by the death of George, 22nd Earl, in 1808, and the honours of Crawford (de jure) reverted to the elder branch in the person of my great-grandfather, Alexander, 6th Earl of Balcarres (confirmed by the House of Lords in 1848).

Lady Mary Lindsay Crawford, Earl George's sister and heiress, was much attached to my father from his childhood, and by her will constituted him as her residuary legatee.

In the year 1834 Lady Mary died, leaving inter alia a small collection of books and manuscripts which had formed the Library of the extinct line.

Moreover, this legacy placed at once a considerable sum of money at the disposal of my father which enabled him greatly to extend the field of his operations.

At this time he was much under the influence of Bibliomania, and his consciousness of the fact, led him to a more rigid adherence to the rule laid down for his own guidance, namely to build up the skeleton before adorning the body.

He began his wider career by extending the list of booksellers with whom he corresponded all over Europe; from the ideal lists of desiderata which he had formed for himself he rapidly accumulated a very large number of the most important works on many subjects—utility and interest liberally construed proved the test and ticket of admission, mere rarity being for the most part excluded.

I cannot help saying that this policy was a mistaken one in his case. The great family Libraries which were formed in the eighteenth century were mostly collected by men who had no intention of reading their books—their acquisitions tended very largely to accumulate editions of the classics, etc.—true, of different dates and by various printers, but the text remaining the same.

I am confident that my father would have been perfectly safe from this danger of buying for rarity solely—his very nature, that of a student above all, would have had to suffer change.

On the other hand, had he used but a quarter of the sums at his disposal in the purchasing of great typographical monuments, the truly rare books of each section of his Library, he would never have repented the action.

In the first third of the nineteenth century the conditions of the book market were very different from those which prevail at present. A Library dispersed was to a great extent absorbed by brother bibliophiles, thus, should a book of prime importance be lost at one sale it was possible, even probable, that in the future it would be again exposed to public competition.

This has been mainly changed by the great increase in number and purchasing power of Public Institutions; a book once entering one of these Libraries is lost for ever to the private collector, the result being that what was scarce then, is rare now; and rare then, has become introuvable.

For twenty years my father kept to his system, the only modification being in the extension of his researches in the East. As the learning of Persian and Arab writers did not exist in print he made large collections of their works in manuscript, which action he subsequently extended to all varieties of Indian, Chinese and Japanese languages.

In the sixties he had begun to acquire rarities, which course he followed, always with systematic moderation, throughout the remainder of his life.

As is only natural when working on so wide a base, those classes of the Library connected with his own pursuits rather outgrew the others, and some were almost entirely neglected. Science, for instance, was well represented in Botany, Natural History, as being companion subjects to those of Voyages and Travels, but nothing was done for Mathematics, Astronomy, Chemistry, etc.; they were subjects foreign to his tastes and laid on one side. I shall revert to this later on.

In the meanwhile books came pouring in, on all subjects from all parts of the world, far quicker indeed than it was possible to shelve them: room after room had its walls covered and old portraits in the passages were hung in the bedrooms and replaced by books.

All this laborious work was never allowed to interfere with the pursuit of his favourite studies on which he wrote largely; a list of his publications will naturally be found in the following pages. And this leads me to speak of what he did in the way of cataloguing the Library.

For many years he was satisfied to mark off a purchase on his ideal desiderata list, and then to enter it on a folio sheet, author, short title, place and date, in fact a title-a-line accession list—and the next purchase would follow irrespective of order. I think it must have been about the years 1862-65 that these folio sheets of accessions were cut up and the slips pasted down on sheets, this time in order of the alphabet, and my impression remains of the pile of sheets, being nearly a foot and a half thick. Then as more books came in they were entered as accessions which after a time were in turn cut up and formed into another alphabet, and another, and another, and yet, so clear was his memory and his sense of locality, that he was not dependent on this pile of folio sheets of catalogue; if any one were to ask him, Is such a book in the Library? he would always answer without hesitation No, or Yes, you will find it on such a shelf in such a room.

That he once contemplated the printing of his catalogue, I am confident, and it would probably have been designed on a modified form of the sixth volume of Brunet.

He certainly devoted a considerable time to the systems of classification of all writers on this subject, but was dissatisfied with all. He wrote a long memorandum on the subject some twenty or thirty years before his death (I think) but, though it is complete he never wrote it out for press, but laid it aside.

I have refrained from entering upon the many other sides of my father's pursuits. I deal solely with that of the re-construction of an ancient heritage, handed down from the past, augmented and embellished to an extent almost beyond the limits of credibility.

This trust was transmitted to me in December 1880, and it remains to render an account of my stewardship

I did not enter upon the custody of the Library without some experience. I mentioned in a former page that a great part of the Scientific branch of the Library had not received adequate attention. Somewhere about the year 1870, my father suggested that I should take these subjects into my charge, which I was only too happy to do, as I was greatly in need of certain sections in my Observatory in Aberdeenshire, and of others in my Physical Laboratory in London.

In those days there were hardly any booksellers in England who specialised on such subjects. However I found plenty in Germany and soon got into friendly correspondence.

As a guide on the subject but one modern book existed, the "Catalogue of the Imperial Observatory at St. Petersburg," by far the finest purely Scientific Library then existing.

This was my constant study, and, with kindly advice from Dr. Otto von Struve, I made a fair beginning My opportunity arrived in the year 1871, when, owing to the death of Charles Babbage, the inventor of the famous calculating machine, his library was offered to me through our old friend the late Bernard Quaritch The offer, needless to say, I accepted without hesitation. It was the best collection of its time after that of Prof. De Morgan, which was subsequently bought by Lord Overstone and presented to the University College of London in Gower Street. With the assistance of the celebrated booksellers, Weigel of Block Book fame, and Friedländer, I was able to fill up my wants of the fifteenth century. Ten years, in fact, served to restore the balance of the departments of the main Library, but though always counted as of it, yet this collection was never in it, being massed at the Observatory.

The formation of this catalogue, after the year 1874, was of great service to me in later years. I made it on a card system kept in drawers—learning thus the supreme advantage over scissors and paste. I was at that time much impressed also with the decimal scheme of Melville Dewey, and prepared an extension of his subdivision of the Mathematical and Physical sciences together with its accompanying indices.

Some considerable time after my father's death was devoted to getting the Library into order (as during his long illness and consequent absence from England some confusion had arisen), and to cutting up and re-distributing the piles of folio sheets on which the slips had been pasted. In pursuance of his methods, to learn if a book was in the library five several alphabets had to be searched.

No one was more aware of this defect than he him-separate sheet of paper, and it was then easy to blend the several alphabets into one consecutive whole, with perfect facility of additions and interpolations I never regretted the labour this re-binding work caused me, as thereby I learnt whether a book already existed and to a very great extent the where-about in the house to look for it

With regard to acquisitions I soon made up my mind that I was not capable of the task to add to the collection, and that for a time devoted my attention to rarities, which, had they been acquired fifty years earlier, could have been obtained at a tenth of the price In this course I tried to make a fair distribution of patronage among the various great divisions of the Library but I made one additional section I have mentioned the fact that the far East was fairly represented in manuscript, so far as literary matters were concerned Having this basis to work upon I made what was already at hand into the nucleus of a collection to illustrate a history of Writing and Art as the study is now pursued We had already a certain number of MSS. which had been bought at various times for uses they were beautiful, both European and Oriental and these I very largely added to until they became a feature of the Library In time I was able to show fine specimens of almost every known written language from the early papyrus of Egypt of many centuries before Christ, through all ages to modern times I did however draw the line at the clay tablets of Babylonia although the Arrow Head character is most interesting

III

The years 1880 to 1890 were very eventful in the book world.

The rumour that the Duke of Marlborough intended to sell his library caused much excitement, as it was the first in modern times of a series of sales of our great family libraries

Indirectly opportunity was offered for me to become the purchaser of the entire collection for a sum of about £20,000. Though sorely tempted I was unable to command the requisite amount in cash

Meanwhile Mr. Bernard Quaritch endeavoured to get the necessary credit from his bankers but unsuccessfully The books were therefore sold at Sotheby's, the sale commencing 12 December, 1881, letters A to C This sale realized £19,300 There were four other sales, the last being the 10-22 March, 1884, making fifty one days in all, for a total sum of £56,500

I have never ceased regretting my inability to effect that purchase, as I should have been able to secure many of the rarest books which have not since then been offered to the public except at very greatly increased prices.

This library was formed by the 4th Earl of Sunderland with great ability and knowledge of what was the best

Digitized by Google Original from CORNELL UNIVERSITY

In subsequent years other great libraries were dispersed, amongst which I may mention the collection from Hamilton Palace which was known as the Beckford Library, in 1882-83. The Hamilton Palace Library proper in 1884—together with Duke's Collection of MSS. which were sold privately to the German Government. At the sale of the Syston Park books, the property of Sir John Thorold, the glorious Psalmorum Codex was bought for upwards of £5000 by Mr. Quaritch, thus constituting a record price for a printed book. It is a strikingly magnificent piece of printing, being not only the first book ever printed with a date (1457) but also the earliest example of compound printing, or the use of two colours in the initials.

The Osterley sale in 1885 was also a most interesting and valuable collection.

From all of these collections I have added to my store.

With regard to printed books I found it desirable to limit myself to one class at a time, devoting attention mainly to filling gaps and generally raising its standard.

After a time I changed to another class and secured examples from all parts of the Continent, thus utilising the numberless correspondents with whom my father had been in communication. At first these tactics were very successful—but I perceived that when I wanted to be told what a dealer could offer me on, say, early works on lace, with woodcuts, if I wrote to Florence, I should be told that there was nothing available for the moment, but that a rare book was expected in a few days. He would send round to his friends, and having got it, offer it to me, naturally at an enhanced price.

To such an extent did this take place, that I found in a few years that an inquiry for any scarce work would in a very short time set the market seriously against me.

I found a method of guarding myself after a while. I prepared a carefully selected list of desiderata, then with the help of a Postal Guide and a foreign Bradshaw, calculated the length of time required for a letter to arrive, say on a Wednesday morning, at half a dozen foreign capitals. Identical copies of my wants would be despatched from London by various posts so that they should be received nearly simultaneously all over Europe. On several occasions this was successful—but it was not often that I carried it out.

In common with all persons who mainly derive their income from the pursuits of trade, I have suffered severely by the recurrent waves of commercial depression which have affected our country, as in whatever branch it may be that the depression shows itself, so suffer the producers of coal, iron and steel.

Such adverse conditions fell upon me in 1887 and 1889, when I was called upon to redeem mortgages which had been laid upon the estates long years ago; and I was forced to realise as best I could, my only available resource being the Library.

It is useless to think that the public will pay large prices at a sale unless the subject-matter is of such an excellence as to cause serious competition among buyers.

At the time I was fairly familiar with the "wants of the market," and what they might reasonably be expected to realise, with the result that on each occasion the bitter sacrifices entailed upon me were not in vain

The next severance of a portion of the Library took place in the year 1890. The Government of the day had accepted my offer to transfer to the Royal Observatory at Edinburgh the whole of the instruments of my own Observatory at Dun Echt, on the condition that the National Institution should be maintained. With the rest of the equipment passed the Library, the catalogue of which was even at the moment of transfer in the hands of the printers.

As I have mentioned above, these books were never actually incorporated in the main collection, so the severance was not so keenly felt—nevertheless I regret now that I did not retain the books, as there was a sufficient working collection for the technical requirement of the Observatory—and a very large proportion of mine were of mediæval bibliographical interest.

At a later period (about 1899) I received a letter from a firm (with whose house my father and I had been in friendly correspondence for more than seventy years) making the inquiry whether I had ever contemplated the parting with my manuscript collections, to which I replied, No, and thought no more about it.

Some eighteen months later I heard from them that they had received definite instructions to procure a collection of MSS. for a customer, and that no other existing collection was to be found: would I consider the question at leisure?

To make a long story short, I said, that if ever I did sell, it would only be at a price which I felt confident that no person would give; finally I did, under pressure, name a sum which I considered would stop further proceedings.

Within ten days I could not help regretting, as I received a letter saying that the client of Messrs. Sotheran was prepared to close the business on the terms I had mentioned, which were, that the collection remained a British one, that all family papers, or MSS. having belonged to members of my family were to be retained, together with a small collection of autograph letters and documents relating to the French Revolution and First Empire. As it happens the purchaser then made a very good investment, as I have no doubt whatever that, were the collection to be offered publicly for sale as a whole, at the present time, it would realise at least three or four times the amount which was paid for it.

It was then only that I learnt that the purchaser was Mrs. Rylands, the lady who some nine years before, had founded in memory of her deceased husband the John Rylands Library of Manchester, and had placed therein the celebrated Althorp Library, probably the finest collection of early printed books ever brought together in this country.

Looking back, I cannot but feel that my action was a right one, as, no matter what were my own personal feelings, I was enabled by this sale to lessen to a very great extent the burdens which had for many years pressed heavily on the family estates.

Before I quit this melancholy theme, I cannot refrain from expressing my undisguised terror of the effects which must follow upon the Duties imposed by our Governments on the successors of a Collector, burdens which in a few generations will inevitably wipe out the capital value of a great library. Were a library or other collection a source of income to its owner, such reasoning might be understood, but as it is, the policy of successive Governments appears to me to lower the dignity of the country at large. Some measure of relief has, I understand, been recently accorded, but in course of time these storehouses of the learning of centuries may be seriously imperilled But I must get on, and not be led away from my theme —The Catalogue.

I had early found that I must obtain external assistance. Some years previously, I had made the acquaintance of Mr. J. P. Edmond, who was in a large way of business as a bookbinder in Aberdeen. We met over the rebinding of a very fine copy of De Bry's "Voyages and Travels," which I had been setting in order for my uncle, Robert Holford of Dorchester House. The story is worth repeating, as there is probably no one now alive who knows it. Very many years ago Mr. Holford had the good judgment to purchase en bloc the library of Lord Vernon, and in it was a remarkable copy of De Bry well bound in fine blue morocco. At the time I was very familiar with all the essentials requisite for a perfect copy—having spent over a year in making a leaf by leaf collation of my own copy which had been put together jointly by my father and myself. This collection was published originally by De Bry in parts or volumes known from their size as Les Grands et Les Petits Voyages. Each appeared in German and in Latin—of each there were two or three editions—and Part. I. was also printed in English and in French.

The original owner of the Vernon-Holford copy had got together a very fine series of parts, and having tied them up for binding, but not in order, sent them through a bookseller to a well-known binder of the day. It unfortunately happened that there was a deadly feud between these two. The bookseller, who believed they were arranged in order for binding (whereas they were merely bundled together by the owner) sent with the parcel a letter directing the volumes to be bound as sent, and urging the binder to be more careful than he had been on some other matter.

This was an opportunity of revenge not to be missed. He bound the set admirably, but just as they had been put into the parcel.

The confusion when I came to examine it was inconceivable—parts and editions mixed up; and yet all looking beautiful.

With the help of Mr. Edmond and my collation I was able to set all in proper order, and Mr. Edmond replaced them in their old covers very successfully—but there was no remedy for the mutilation caused by cutting the parts, etc., to different heights, which was made painfully visible by the new arrangement of the volumes.

Mr. Edmond had taken intense pleasure and interest in this piece of work, and had most favourably impressed me. When [illegible]

ing back upon the work of the previous eight or nine years during which I had been elaborating a scheme, I cannot but be sensible now, that I was more influenced by the feeling that the [illegible] of a [illegible] library made for the use of the owner and of his descendants should be of a nature such as to lend to those who were to use it as great a measure of help and assistance as might be possible, and by such [illegible] to interest a future owner to take up and [illegible] special sections or branches of learning the elements of which had been gathered from the catalogue and [illegible] the result

The result may be found [illegible] for I confess that I have used [illegible] writers on the [illegible] from one or the other what seemed to me best to fulfil the object of my undertaking.

This my Catalogue is [illegible] appearance of an [illegible] logue compiled [illegible] catalogue have practically been followed [illegible] case of pseudonymous works I enter them under the pseudonym, [illegible] reference from the latter wherever possible. The British Museum Catalogue has often been of the [illegible] and again the Bowyer [illegible] largely followed.

To assist the reader I have used [illegible] to the various sections, and have placed a list of these headings which [illegible]

The sizes of the books have been [illegible] foldings of the paper or [illegible] the page from the top to the foot [illegible]

I do not think that any abbreviations in the work will be found which are not familiar to the general reader, and I have seldom used contractions or shortened forms of words.

In most large libraries worthy the name, there will be found a number of what are often called "Collected Works". As a general rule their contents are lost to all, save those who have made themselves familiar with the mass of material they contain. I allude to such as "Pertz," "Bouquet," "Muratori," "Harleian Miscellany," "Bollandists," etc., as also the publications of learned bodies, e.g. the Roxburghe, Abbotsford, Bannatyne, Spalding, etc. Clubs, the Surtees, the Chetham, the Camden Societies, etc. The varied contents of these volumes are analysed with entries made in the proper place in the main Catalogue with cross reference to the [illegible] binding, or historic provenance, I have broken up many hundreds of these volumes, and each individual tract is separately bound in stout "Japanese vellum paper," and then ranged in order of date and subject in book boxes. The tracts are thus accessible and can always be added to by interpolation.

The news-letters or papers of the period of the Great Civil Wars I have treated in the same manner, and I have broken them up so as to show the course of public opinion of all sides in contiguity one with another. Thus the various news-letters which deal with a week ending say 19th June, 1646, will be found together in the box which is titled with that date. What may be considered to be a treatment almost barbarous, I find a very useful method, and the only one allowing a missing number to take its proper place, and again the correct sequence of any news-letter may easily be restored. I have not, however, treated the "London Gazette" in this manner.

The detail of the form once adopted, the catalogue advanced fairly rapidly. It was written on fairly stiff paper of a small folio size and worked on the card system. The boxes grew rapidly in number under Mr. Edmond and his assistants (of whom I speak later), and at length their number and bulk caused them to be unwieldy, and I began setting up in type to relieve the congestion about 1899.

For many years the University Press of Aberdeen had undertaken all my work, and the printing was entrusted to this establishment. It is right that I should here express my warm thanks to Mr. Thomson for the constant care and attention which has been given to the work. He has allowed the galleys to remain standing since the commencement, for the convenience of arrangement, and at one time there were very nearly five tons of type set up, ready for paging. Another feature which should be noticed is the fact that almost every language is represented in its own character (of course with a transcription or translation).

For the outward form of the volumes I am indebted to the British Museum Catalogue—a small folio in appearance, printed in double columns.

It has often been said that nothing is more prone to take the conceit out of a man than for him to print a catalogue. I am in truth very sensible of the fact. Inconsistent treatment may be found in the works first catalogued eighteen or twenty years ago, and which has not been found easy to correct, inasmuch as the type has been standing for more than ten years; and again in methods of arrangement every one's pet goose is the only swan. I hope therefore that my many professional friends in the public institutions where these volumes may go will be lenient to my shortcomings, and be assured that I am responsible for all of them and not these gentlemen whose names here follow.

LIST OF THE STAFF OF THE BIBLIOTHECA LINDESIANA FROM 1891.

Messrs. J. P. Edmond, Librarian	1891-1904 (Dead).
A. G. E. Phillips, Assistant Librarian	1896-1904
A. F. Fairhurst, Junior Assistant	1898-1905
J. Peacock, Assistant	1899-1903
W. B. Rye, Assistant	1899-1900 (Dead).

Messrs. Alex. de Zandt, Assistant (Scandinavian and Slavonic)	1899-1902
Miss V. M. Sinclair, Assistant (for Cross References)	1901-1906

Mr. J. P. Edmond resigned the appointment on being chosen Chief Librarian of the Signet Library, Edinburgh.

A. G. E. Phillips, promoted Librarian	1904
A. Fairhurst, Assistant, promoted	1907-1909 (Dead).
R. F. Middlehurst, Junior Assistant	1906.
G. England, Assistant	1909.

Outside help was necessary on certain languages:—

A. E. Cowley, M.A., Sub-librarian, the Bodleian Library, in the Hebrew and Samaritan languages.

A. G. Ellis, of the British Museum, Oriental books comprising the Arabic, Armenian, Canarese, Gujerati, Javanese, Malay, Pehlvi, Persian, Sanscrit, Turkish, and Zend languages.

To all these gentlemen I desire to express my most sincere thanks for their constant and cordial co-operation and zeal for the good of the Library and the success of the Catalogue, to the making of which they have given so many hours of their lives.

WHAT REMAINS FOR ME TO DO.

It must by no means be thought that the volumes now issued contain the whole of the Library. Of late years my interest and attention have been mainly directed to history, and I have brought together a considerable amount of material of a very peculiar nature. The collection of this literature in the form of single sheets, broadsides, proclamations, etc., has always had a fascination for me—and at times I have printed a few copies of small monographs which I have since extended. One of these concerning Royal and other proclamations is even now at the press only waiting for its introduction.

Another volume also at press, though not so far advanced, is devoted to a subject seldom met with and little known—the literature of Philately. Following these will come the catalogue of books on the French Revolution and the First Empire, and also a catalogue raisonné of the autograph letters dealing with the same period.

It is also my intention to reprint other small works on Ballads, English and foreign Broadsides, Notes and Collations, and Miscellanea; finally, the catalogue of a collection of some 8,000 Papal Bulls, Briefs, etc., on all subjects dealing with the ecclesiastical and civil history of Rome and the States of the Church.

To have included some 30,000 or 40,000 single folio sheets in the main catalogue would have destroyed the continuity both of the catalogue itself and the treatment of their subject-matter: this is my reason for their separate publication.

L'ENVOI.

I have done, and now send forth the results of some twenty years' continuous work, undertaken in the cause of my successors, as a souvenir to my personal friends, and I trust as a work of interest to the many public institutions and libraries spread over the world, with whom I have long been in friendly communication.

AARON, BEN ELIJAH, Qaraite. כפר עץ חיים. Sepher 'Ez hayyim. The tree of life. A theological work on the plan of Maimonides' Mezech Nebhukkim, together with a commentary on it by Sahhah Isaac b. Moses, of Poland, called the Qaraite Rasha. Goslow [Eupatoria], Meridional Tauchin, 1847.
Fol. 13½ in. Hebrew. 270 + 274 pp.
 The author Aaron called "the younger" was a Qaraite of Nicomedia of the name ניקומיריאי, who died at Constantinople in 1969. The first edition was published by Delitzsch in Leipzig, 1841.

AARON, BEN JOSEPH, Qaraite. ספר המבחר. Sepher ham-mibhhar. The book of choice things, or ham-mubhhar, the choice book. A commentary on the Pentateuch, with a super-commentary, called צירת כסף. (Tirath Keseph, Palace of silver) by Joseph Solomon b. Moses.
Goslow [Eupatoria], 1835.
Fol. 13½ in. Hebrew. 250 leaves.
 The author Aaron called "the first" was a Qaraite physician at Constantinople who died about 1430. The title is given as ס' המבחר וטוב המכחר, but it is usually quoted as וטוב המבחר.

—— זכור לאברהם. Zikhor l'Abraham. Remember Abraham (Exod. xxxii. 13). A commentary on the former prophets i.e. Joshua to Kings, and Isaiah.

חותם תכנית. Hôthem takhnith. Sealing up the sum (Ezek. xxviii.). 12, by the Qaraite Abraham Firkovitch, completing the commentary on Isaiah.
Goslow [Eupatoria], 1834.
Fol. 13¼ in. Hebrew. 2 parts. I. 16 leaves. II. 58 leaves.
 Abraham b. Samuel Firkovitch, a prominent Qaraite, died at Chufut-Kale in the Crimea in 1874. He became famous as a traveller and collector of MSS., both Qaraite and Rabbanite, which he sold to the Imperial Library at St. Petersburg. Many of his discoveries are of great value, but it is now generally admitted that some at least are forgeries intended as proofs of the antiquity of the Qaraite community.

Aberdeen's New Almanack Or A New Prognostication, For the Year of Our Lord 1724. Being the Leap Year. Calculated exactly according to Art, for the Benefit of the Ancient Kingdom of Scotland. Giving the exact Account of the Day and Hour of the New Moon, her full Age and Quarters, throughout the whole Year 1724. With the astonishing Eclipse of the Sun in May the 11th d[ay] and of the Moon in October 21st. Rising and setting of the Sun every 11th Day of the Month, according to the Latitude of the 57 Degrees [sic]: Also the true length of the Day and Night, and how many Days the Month hath, with the Disposition of the Weather, and the whole Yearly Fairs.

The Sun's eclips'd, the Moon deprived of Light
Both in this Year, and both within our Sight,
Sad Prodromi of Slaughters and Exile
And Grand Mutations in Great Britains Isle;
But what these are let Time it self discry,
For that will speak the Truth, so may not I.

Herbert III. 1631.

 "This Admonition, Mr. Strype tells us, had by this time (1572) been printed and reprinted privately no less than four times; in such a vogue it was, notwithstanding the diligence of the bishops to suppress it. The last time, which was this year, it came forth with additions." Neal states that this first admonition was presented to the House by the authors themselves, Mr. Field and Mr. Wilcox, for which they were committed to Newgate, Oct. 2.

 The above is only the second part of the complete work as described by Hain and others. The first part contains the original text of Aesop, and the third part a selection of the fables in Greek and Latin in two columns. From the binding, which seems to be contemporary with the work, it is probable that copies of this second part were sold distinct from the others. Bonus Accursius is believed to have been corrector or editor; the printer is unknown, but from the similarity of the Greek character to the first edition of the Greek Grammar of Lascaris, it has been conjectured to have come from the same press.

 First edition and one of the five books printed in capital letters by Alopa. The last eight leaves are frequently missing, and their deficiency is explained by Roscoe as follows. The Anthology was published in Florence in August, 1494, and the French entered Italy in September of that same year, under the command of Charles VIII., an event which was followed by the expulsion of Piero de' Medici. Mr. Roscoe thinks that under these circumstances the editor found it advisable to cut off from his book a dedication composed in honour of an outlaw. On that account copies sold after that date would want the last eight leaves.

 This edition is chiefly valuable on account of the engravings by Girolamo Porro, and it is of very rare occurrence that the proper engraving to canto 34 is to be found. That plate was not ready in time for printing with the work, and the plate for canto 33 was repeated. When found it is always pasted over the wrong plate, as in the present instance.

 Supposed to be the first book printed at Ipswich. Herbert, from certain copies having on the title "Excudebatur praesens opus VVesaliae per Theodoricum Plateanum," thinks that the work was printed at Wesel as far as leaf 244, which concludes with a memoir of Bale and mentions his return to England in 1548 from exile in Germany. Herbert also mentions a single leaf with a portrait of Bale half length, and under it "Haec est effigies docti genuina Balaei . . .," but I can find no trace of this portrait in any other authority.
